

Contents

Preface	vii
Acknowledgments	ix
Introduction	1
1. Synergy of Theme, Style, and Dialogue: Kenji Mizoguchi's Sisters of the Gion (1936)	17
2. Dream, Song, and Symbol: Akira Kurosawa's Drunken Angel (1948)	33
3. A Meiji Novel for the Screen: Shirō Toyoda's The Mistress (1954)	49
4. Period Film Par Excellence: Hiroshi Inagaki's Samurai Trilogy (1954–1956)	66
5. Simple Means for Complex Ends: Yasujirō Ozu's Floating Weeds (1959)	93
6. Eros, Politics, and Folk Religion: Kaneto Shindō's Onibaba (1963)	108
7. The Age-Old Paradox of Innocence and Experience: Kōhei Oguri's Muddy River (1981)	122
8. Satire on the Family and Education in Postwar Japan: Yoshimitsu Morita's The Family Game (1983)	136
9. Defeat Revisited: Masahiro Shinoda's MacArthur's Children (1984)	152
10. Satire on Contemporary Japan: Jūzō Itami's A Taxing Woman (1987)	165
11. Animation Seminal and Influential: Hayao Miyazaki's My Neighbor Totoro (1988)	176
12. Cultural Responses to Simplicity: Akira Kurosawa's Madadayo (1993)	187

Contents

13. The Danger and Allure of Phantom Light: Hirokazu Koreeda's Maboroshi (1995)	198
14. Stressed-Out Nineties Youth in Laid-Back Sixties Dress: Takeshi Kitano's Kids Return (1995)	219
15. Bittersweet Childhood: Yōichi Higashi's Village of Dreams (1996)	232
16. A Woman Director's Approach to the Country Family: Naomi Kawase's Suzaku (1997)	244
Notes	259
Selected Bibliography	277
Index	283